About the Course:

This 2.5 day instructor development program challenges participants to consider the principles and practices of community policing as a means of building trust and achieving the public safety mission by engaging the community in the shared responsibility of effective policing.

Participants examine the current state of policing, exploring and discussing issues which contribute to a cycle of dysfunction that left unchecked can have devastating long-term impacts on police practitioners, their agencies and communities. The course encourages participants to develop and employ more functional patrol techniques that increase cooperation from community members, increase efficiency in arrests and seizure activity, and decrease liability associated with complaints.

Audience:

Law enforcement professionals/trainers with, at a minimum:

- Basic knowledge of community policing;
- Instructional experience;
- Current training responsibilities within their organization or academy; and
- A “good faith” agreement indicating a willingness and ability to deliver the training (to be completed by the participant and a supervisor after registration).

Cost:

This course is offered TUITION-FREE by the Virginia Center for Policing Innovation (VCPI), thanks to funding provided by the U.S. Department of Justice, Office of Community Oriented Policing Services (COPS Office). Participating trainers receive comprehensive presentation materials to provide instruction in formats suitable to their organizations’ needs (during in-service programs, squad training session, roll-call and more).
